New research from IT services company Atlas Cloud has revealed that more than four-fifths (87 per cent) of Britain's recruitment consultants think it would be easy to take data from their employers when moving jobs.

The global survey of 1,000 recruitment consultants revealed that British recruitment consultants are the most likely to think taking candidate or client data with them when moving jobs would be either "easy" (50 per cent) or "very easy" (37 per cent).

They were followed by US-based recruitment consultants, where almost two-thirds of whom overall thought it would be easy to take data (63 per cent), and South African recruitment
